The late soluble expression strategy is an efficient preparation process for recombinant protein expression in Escherichia coli culture. Here, we present a modified late soluble expression process based on the four-stage cultivation process. In the first stage, the strain was grown at a non-inducing temperature at the beginning of the cultivation process. Then the recombinant protein was accumulated at a high cell density by cold shock induced 30 min after cultivation was started. In the 570a42141b
