During the development process, FIFA developers took an active role to ensure that these motions work seamlessly into the game, even while conducting A.I. routines and playing a match. Today, we are releasing further details on the video below. This video, created by our in-house producers, showcases just some of the motion capture data contained in the NFL 2K19 engine. As you can see, the data coming from the game engine is precise and robust. As a result, we are able to apply great animations to replicating motion. Just like the way you saw virtual experience in our soccer engine, the motions available in the new FIFA will also look authentic, realistic and high-performance. As a result of the approach we've taken during the development of the new engine, players don't appear to be running on springs but rather seem to be a part of the gameplay. As we get closer to the launch of the game, we will release more developer commentary videos on what we have introduced to FIFA in NFL 2K19. Please continue to check this blog, as well as our other development blogs, for additional developer commentary and insights. Also, we are excited to share more news about FIFA on January 17th when EA SPORTS™ invites you to join us for FIFA Fan Fair (2K19) in Paris, France, where fans around the world will be able to play FIFA for the first time. Stay tuned to EA.com/FIFA on January 18th for more details.

Inequality and Economics: Inequality in end-of-life care: the way forward. So what can be done to reduce the wealth gap in end-of-life care at the end of life? The question has been addressed by academics, patients, providers, health policy experts, and others. Some have argued that more physicians should consider joining palliative medicine and providing terminal care. Others have suggested that health policy reform is needed. And still others have focused on changing attitudes and the delivery of palliative care. Do you think that any of these suggestions can get us to where we need to be?
